

Injustice Against Real Australians

The Aboriginal people in our community, especially kids, face many purposeless social injustices in our schooling generation. This issue appeals to me because I am in school I hear all the horrible things being said and joked about and also because I am of different skin colour and I consider myself as Australian as anyone else.

I could not even imagine being shunned everywhere I went and yet some of these children are shunned all the time and they ignore it. This is definitely not rite and is definitely not Australian.

When Aboriginals were first sighted in Australia by the British, they were not considered as people because they did not live in houses or wear clothes. It seems the British influenced our ways of thinking but at least today we recognise them as people but we do not recognise them for what they are. Instead we recognise them as a fake image we have of them. This is totally wrong and against the bureau of Human Rights.

Just down the road from my house, there is a white Australian man living in a house with Aboriginal children. He adopted them and he sends them to school. They all seem extremely happy and when ever I see them playing outside, I feel that this is the real life that they deserve. I wish all Australians could be like that man, to respect people for what they are, not what they look like.

Breman Janarthanan

Injustice Against Real Australians

In conclusion, there is a major problem in the way our youth treats people of different races, especially Aboriginals. They should be given equal opportunities as any other child but this is not happening in our current lifestyle.